

BUILDING HIGH PERFORMING DESIGN-BUILD TEAMS

A large global contractor surveyed two years of projects and divided them into two categories. Successful and unsuccessful. Their conclusion? 100% of projects that begin poorly, end badly. From that lesson they developed a process to ensure success at the front end of their projects. Every project begins with high hopes and the best intentions. But those can quickly evaporate when the first wave of challenges hits a team. For some teams adversity pulls everyone together. For many teams it tears everyone apart and the project turns into a battle zone. How valuable would it be to know ahead of time how your team will respond under pressure? Rex Miller will share key lessons and principles and also introduce a tool that will help you create a highly aligned and resilient team - for every project.

SPEAKER

Mr. Rex Miller, Author, Advisor

Rex Miller is an internationally award winning author, respected futurist, an elite coach and compelling keynote speaker. He is a winner of both the CoreNet Global Innovators Award and Industry Excellence Award. He used the same MindShift crowdsource model for these CoreNet initiatives to tackle our broken education system. In his new book Humanizing the Education Machine where he explores why the U.S. education system is perfectly designed to create disengaged teachers and students and how to turn schools around.

In his book, The Commercial Real Estate Revolution, Rex provides a roadmap for changing the adversarial culture that drives many construction projects. It chronicles the success of owners and contractors who used trust-based teams to build better, safer and lower cost projects. And, how they have changed the rules for all of us. Rex has far exceeded the 10,000 hour rule for mastering some of the biggest challenges corporate leaders face. In addition these two books he has also written Change Your Space, Change Your Culture, a guide for leaders to use good design and space as a catalyst for creating strong and engaging cultures. He is also the author of The Millennium Matrix, an innovative system for anticipating and adapting to the future.
